Ecotourism: What on Earth Is It?

Ecotourism can simply mean visiting a place where nature - or ecology - is the main attraction. Ecotourism involves travel to natural habitats, places where the land and wildlife are the reason for visiting and may be in need of preservation. Sustainable tourism on the other hand is when tourists make a smaller impact on the place they are visiting. This means respect for the local culture as well choosing businesses that have sustainable practices. Ecotourism and sustainable tourism are ethically similar, and shouldn't be confused with adventure tourism, as tour packages that take visitors to national parks or reserves may not necessarily be operated by companies that are actively preserving or supporting the location.

In countries like Australia, Sweden, Costa Rica and Kenya, ecotourism guidelines have been put in place, but elsewhere the classification is loose and tourism businesses can make use of the term without committing to the environment.
A legitimate ecotourism destination respects and supports the indigenous people of the area. Those of us who dream of an adventure in the Galapagos or taking wildlife photographs in misty jungle locations should look for an eco-tour with a genuine operator so our tourist dollar goes towards the local community and conservation of the surrounding environment.

Activity 2 : Answer the following questions about the text.

1- What is ecotourism?
2- Is ecotourism different from sustainable tourism? Justify your answer.
3- Does hiring a tour package guaranty ecotourism? Justify your answer.
4- What does a true ecotourism destination imply?
